Choosing Required Readings for the Course

It is important that reading lists contain the most relevant and robust knowledge that students need to develop the skills and competencies to pass the course and be successful fundraisers.

EFA does not seek to approve your readings lists, since you are in the best place to judge which readings are appropriate to your course. But we do consider your processes for compiling those required reading lists.

- a) Do you have a process for compiling readings lists that sets criteria for inclusion on the list? If so, please describe what that process is. Please detail how you assess the quality of the reading and discriminate between different categories of source material, such as academic papers, market research and books written by fundraising practitioners, and whether you use a textbook for the whole or much of the course

- b) If you do not have such a process, please describe how you do compile your required reading lists.

- c) Sample reading list. Please list here the five sources on your recommended reading list that you consider are five most important that students should read.
